Sam Davis, of Cleveland, quit after wrestling Al Eckerman forty-five minutes and fifty seconds at Fostoria, Ohio.

Jockey J. Martin will not ride for W. B. Jennings this year. He has signed with Andrew Miller and W. B. Leeds. Johnny Ward, ex-captain of the New York

Nationals, says that Christy Mathewson is the greatest pitcher in the world.

Nancy Hanks, one time holder of the world's trotting record, will go under the hammer at Readville, Mass., on May 23.

Jockey Patsy McCue seems to have regained some of his old-time form. Some of his rides at Bennings were very creditable.

Gwyn Tompkins' fine jumper is in great form. Harrow is his name, and it looks as though he will "harrow" well this season.

When McChesney's racing days are over E. E. Smathers will start a breeding farm in Kentucky, putting Mac at the head of the stud

George H. Thompson, who was one of the leading lockeys in France last season, has signed to ride for John E. Madden this year.

Eddie Hughes, who trained W. K. Vanderbilt's horses in France, has been secured by John E.

Madden to train part of his string this season. Major Delmar, 1:59 1-4, has wintered in good shape, having gained about seventy-five pounds, weighing 1,080. The Major is in Alta McDonald's stable, near Albany. George Davis will play shortstop for the Chicago Americans this season, having patched up his differences with Manager Comiskey. Davis will greatly strengthen the White Sox.

H. J. West won the all-round gymnastic honors of Columbia College on March 29. The peculiar feature of his winning the championship was that he did not finish first in a single event.

Walter Eckersall, the star sprinter, football and baseball player of Chicago University, has decided to give up his college course to become a member of the Dubuque (Ia.) professional baseball team.

Bobby Walthour, the American bicyclist, recently defeated Dangla, the Frenchman, at Paris, France. The race consisted of two heats, one for ten kilometers and the other for twenty.

Few persons who witness a performance of the F. F. Proctor Stock Company located at several of his theatres, realize the amount of work required for a careful production of plays, ranging from Shakespearean production to modern farce comedies. Even to offer a slipshod performance would require a tremendous amount of work, but to put them on in the careful fashion in which the Proctor plays are always produced is an accomplishment little short of marvelous. The succeeding week's play is given to the company Tuesday morning, when the parts are read over and the stage business indicated. This occupies two mornings, half the play being gone through each morning. Thursday there is a full rehearsal of the entire play, and Friday morning the actors are permitted to remain home and study their parts, reporting Saturday morning ready to rehearse "letter perfect"that is, without the manuscript before them. Sunday they are not required to be at the theatre, but Monday morning there is a short rehearsal, to make sure that the lines are retained, and the piece is put on Monday afternoon. In the meantime, from two to four sets of scenery have had to be painted in the scenic studio, controlled by Mr. Proctor; several hundred dollars worth of properties must be obtained; the stage bands must be rehearsed in the handling of the scenery, and suitable music specially arranged for the production, in addition to which the players give two performances a day and look after the details of the costumes, costumes being furnished by the management only when the period is other than modern. In several of the recent revivals competent critics have declared that the revival was of equal merit and sumptuousness with the original.

PARR WON ROUGH BOUT.

In one of the roughest wrestling matches ever seen in Buffalo, N. Y., Jim Parr defeated Yankee Rogers on March 29, and the way they mauled each other kept the crowd in a fever of excitement. Parr had bet $100 that he would defeat Rogers in straight falls, and it was with a look of diagust and surprise that he darted at Rogers when he arose from the mat, loser of the first fall in a little over twenty-two minutes of wrestling.

Every trick known to wrestling science was used by Parr. Nothing was left undone to mar each other's facial beauty or pump the wind out of each other. Finally, after twenty-seven minutes of heart-breaking work Parr won the second fall with a back hammer

The third bout was a series of examples of strength seldom seen on the mat and the end came when Parr raised Rogers and dashed him on the mat. Rogers half arose, when Parr was on him like a tiger and jammed his head to the floor of the ring. Unfortunately for Rogers it was off the mat, and his head hit "Say, on de level, can't you keep still? Didn't I tell | a hard plank a wallop which could be heard all over

William Considine, of Detroit, was the referee. The weight was 135 pounds.

After sparring for an opening Gardner landed the left to the stomach and followed it up with a right to the head. Gans came back with the left on the jaw. It was nip and tuck after this till the bell sounded. In the second Gardner went after Gans and staggered him with a left counter on the jaw. He kept this work up, making Gans retreat with a volley of lefts and rights. They mixed it up for dear life in the third. Although

Gardner landed several times, his blows were too short to do much damage. Toward the close, however, he made the negro wince with a right under the heart. For two rounds more Gardner held the upper hand, and Gans' followers were much distressed. In the sixth Gans roused himself and by constant jabbing kept Gardner on the defensive. The pace was severe and both were tired. Gardner fought without judgment, while Gans was cool and calculating. Gardner was much refreshed in the seventh and he made up for lost ground.

In the eighth Gans took the lead by jabbing his man. The blows were stiff and Gardner wobbled. Just before the gong sounded Gans hit low and immediately apologized. The blow had no material effect.

The final two rounds were extremely interesting. Gardner went on to score a knockout, but Joe met him at every turn. He checked his rival with well-delivered jabs, although he had to take a few wallops himself.

M'CLELLAND DEFEATS HAMILTON

Jack McClelland, of Pittsburg, got the decision in fifteen rounds before the Nonparell A. C. over Jack Hamilton, of Troy, N. Y., at Beaver Falls, Pa., March 28

About 1,200 witnessed the scrap, which was lively from the start. McClelland rushed the fighting for ten rounds. Hamilton tried every round to get in his right swing, but McCleiland ducked each time or stepped back. Hamilton stood his punishment well. The men weighed in at 128 pounds. Dan Braden, of Beaver Falls, was the referee.

WHAT PAPERS SAY OF FOX'S ATHLETIC LIBRARY.

The Express has received copies of Fox's Athletic Library and they form an interesting addition of statistical information for the sporting man. George Bothner, the lightweight wrestling crack, writes on "Scientific Wrestling," and gives many valuable pointers to students of the sport. The book is well illustrated. The revised edition of "Boxing and How to Train," by Sam C. Austin, sporting editor of the Ga-ZETTE, is an important work on this branch of athletics and is also profusely illustrated with poses of the leading boxers of the day. The "Poilce Gazette Sporting Annual" for 1904 contains information of happenings of the year and in the past which make it a handy record book

Richard K. Fox also issues an Art Album containing many full-page portraits of boxers, wrestlers, baseball players and others of prominence in the sporting and theatrical world, a desirable collection. The album is handsomely bound in white vellum .- From the Buffalo (N. Y.) Express,

SCROGGS A CINCH FOR TIPMAN.

Joe Tipman, the featherweight, had an easy time defeating Harry Scroggs before the Knickerbocker A. C., Baltimore, Md., March 29. The second round saw the end of what was scheduled to be a fifteen-round set-to.

It was conceded that Tipman would prove the winner, but few thought that the bout would not go five rounds at least. At the tap of the gong the men opened up in whirlwind fashion, both landing. From Scroggs' work at this point it appeared as if he might make it interesting for Tipman. The latter, however, soon changed the appearance of things, and by sending in a volley of right and left jabs to the face had the claret flowing free from Scroggs' nose,

The second round saw the end. Tipman forced matters and soon had his opponent holding on. A rain of right and left swings sent Scroggs down and out.

AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP BOUTS.

More than three thousand people gathered in Me. chanics' Hall, Boston, Mass., March 29, to witness the amateur fights, held under the auspices of the A. A. U., and which decided the championships for the ensuing Altogether there were twenty-four bouts decided and one event won by forfeit, that being in the 158-pound class, in which C. T. Mitchell and W. J. Rodenbach were to have been the competitors. Mitchell withdrew, as he had had a hard fight in the final of the 145-pound class, leaving Rodenbach master of the field.

This gave the New York man two championships as he beat Emory Payne, of New York, in a clever and decisive manner for the heavyweight championship. His timely jabs and left-hand wallops to the belly weakened Payne, and the referee was called upon to exercise his authority in the third round and stop the affair. Payne was groggy, and another good punch would have put him to sleep. He outweighed Rodenbach fifty-two pounds, but this advantage did not favor him, for Rodenbach was too speedy on his feet and nimbly got out of his way.

There were no end of fights among the crowd, and the police were in demand from the time the show opened with a bout in the 135-pound class at 7:45 P. M. until it closed at 1 o'clock in the morning. The following men carried off the honors:

105-Pound Class-Joe O'Brien, of Cambridge.

115-Pound Class-Jerry Casey, of New York. 125-Pound Class-T. F. Fitzpatrick, of South Boston.

135-Pound Class-Goliath Jones, of Cambridge.

145-Pound Class-C. J. Mitchell, of Waltham. M. J. Rodenbach carried away medals emblematic of the middle and heavyweight championships.

Parr apparently did not notice it, but dragged his man over to the white part of the mat, his right knee at the same time catching Rogers in the pit of the stomach, forcing what little breath there was in his body out and gained the fall. At first it was thought that Rogers was injured, but in a few minutes he came around all right.

GRIMM LICKED AGAIN.

Joe Grimm, he of the iron jaw, who boasts of not sessing a solar plexus, was the recipient of one of the worst beatings of his career at the Southern A. C., Philadelphia, March 29. Dave Holly, the busky colored lightweight, was the boy who delivered the trouncing to Grimm, and the Italian champion was a sorry looking spectacle when the six rounds were ended. Grimm ever managed to last the limit is indeed a mystery. He received enough punishment to stop any two ordinary men, yet with the exception of the latter part of the sixth round, when he was knocked down twice, he stood up gamely under the terrible gruelling.

GANS OUTPOINTS GUS GARDNER.

Joe Gans successfully defended his title of lightweight champion against Gus Gardner, of Philadelphia, before the Saginaw (Mich.) A. C., on March 28. The men met for ten rounds and Gans was the winner on points.

Gans did not have the easy thing he expected, but had to fight every inch to win. He landed often, but his blows did not have their old-time vim and power behind them. Gardner, however, was outclassed, just the same. Gans was the favorite at 10 to 6 on to win and even | quick profits. That's enough.

A HORSE RACE HUNCH.

BROUGHT BIG PROFITS

He Got Down on What Seemed to be a Dead One. But Came Out All Right for Him.

MISSING A TRAIN NETTED HIM SIXTEEN HUNDRED

When He Started Out He Had $300, but He Went Home With $2,100 to the Good and Now He's Happy.

A $1,000 a year clerk at Washington got a hunch on a horse named Honoiulu not long ago and he concluded to play him for many different reasons with which the name of Honolulu was associated.

The rest of the clerks gave him the laugh on it because they had seen some of his hunches go very much to the bad, but he felt all right about it so he pulled $300 out of his savings bank. He went to the St. Asaph pool room ready to invest, and when the odds were put up at 10, 4 and 2, he began to weaken. He asked a wise guy about the long price.

"Say," was the answer, "d'je ever take a peek at that old crab's legs? Why, he's the worst crip in training. Both of his front legs are as big as a kag of oysters at the knees. He's li'ble to fall down on them cagey old legs and lose an eye any minute in a race. I wouldn't play that one with Panama paper money, good when the canal's dug."

Thus, the hunch was in a fair way to be punctured, when it was suddenly inflated again by a couple of new feeders.

Meditating upon the mud-running ability of Honolulu's great sire, Star Ruby, the clerk recalled to mind, with awakening enthusiasm, that the wife of his brother in Honolulu was named Ruby. This recoilection fanned the hunch into a pretty moderate flame

The thing, however, that blew it into a roaring blaze was this: The clerk found himself brushing elbows with a wealthy Filipino student here who has so successfully studied the form of the horses during the past twelvemonth that he has gained local renown as a successful poolroom plunger.

The man with the hunch had seen this Filipino before, and the man had always reminded him of the leading tailor of Honolulu, a Chinaman named Abana, ment, this office.

who is particularly cherished by American naval officers for the excellent fits he makes of white uniforms. Ahana had made the committee clerk's mufti garments during his stay in Honolulu; and here, ducking around the poolroom, was the little Filipino who had always made him think of Ahana and Honolulu.

"Me for the Honolulu thing, anyhow," he found himself gibbering as he made his way up to the "I'm not framing up any life-long regrets for myself, and that's where I'd stand if Honolulu went through and me not down. And if Honolulu should cop and the bunch at the Capitol heard that the price had stampeded me off, they'd make my life miserable. "Hundred each way across the tape, Honolulu," be said to the grinning ticket writer, passing over his three one hundred dollar notes.

The manager of the room happened to be standing by the counter, and after the ticket-$1,000 to $100, $400 to $100 and $200 to $100-had been written, he smiled

"Nice grease, shipmate," said the manager to the clerk. "Like taking a rubber ring from a sick baby." The clerk, somewhat crestfallen under the guying, was trying to frame up some sort of an answer, when the operator announced that they were off. Honolulu was beaten just one tooth at the wire by the favorite, Stand Pat, and the clerk was $500 to the good on his hunch.

He put on his overcoat and was the first at the cashing window. He wanted to take the first train leaving St. Asaph for Washington, and only had a margin of seven minutes.

There was a bit of delay in confirming the race, and when the clerk got his money he started to run for it. He was only half way to the station when the electric train, pulled in and, after only an instant's stop, pulled out again.

The clerk returned to the poolroom to get out of the cold until the next train for Washington was due, half an hour later. Again he took a seat at the extreme rear, so that the sight of the blackboard would not

He had hardly sat down before the operator had called out through the megaphone the first line of betting against the horses in the first race at the Oakland

"The Hay-wayne, 10 to 1," called out the operator, after announcing the prices against the preferred horses. The cierk sat stunned in his chair. He was familiar with that pronunciation of "Hawaiian." But until that instant he had never known that there was such a race horse in the world as The Hawalian.

Dazed at the possibilities of this second hunch, he almost tottered over to the blackboard. There it was all right. The Hawaiian, 10, 4 and 2, across the board. Bottom horse on the list. Apprentice boy up.

He feverishly grabbed the dope charts out of the hand of a man he knew, to look up The Hawalian. He found that The Hawalian had been showing himself to be one of the most consistent horses on the San Francisco tracks-that is to say, The Hawalian had finished a consistent last in all of his recent races.

"Same on the charts as he is on the board-last horse," muttered the clerk to himself.

But the Honolulu-The Hawaiian hunch was strong enough to overcome all hesitation. The clerk went to it, a hundred each way, receiving the same kind of ticket as he had got on Honolulu-$1,000 to $100, $400 to $100 and $200 to $100.

"Flash on The Hay-wayne," droned the operator, almost as soon as the man with the second hunch had "Now 7 to 1," and the board mal chalked up 7, 3 and 1 against the horse, giving the clerk $500 the best of the price; at any rate, so far as his ticket went.

"'Nother flash on The Hay-wayne-now 5 to 1," called out the operator a minute later, and the clerk gazed joyfully at a ticket with just double the figures then on the board, showing him to have beaten the post price by just $800.

He had the additional comfort of knowing that the plungers at the Californian track were going to The Hawaiian.

The Hawalian didn't get so much as a whistle from the operator, even when the first three leaders were in the stretch, with ten lengths separating them. "The Hay-wayne wins, easy, by two lengths!" bawled the operator then, whereupon the clerk, with a grave, chalky face, solemnly removed the new $4 bowler hat to which he had staked himself only the day before, placed it carefully on the floor in front of him and then jumped on it until it was a shapeless mass. He felt that he had to do something vicious and unusual to express his ecstasy. He caught the next train for Washington, $2,100 to the good on a double-jointed hunch. His missing a train by a few yards had been worth $1,600 to him.

Had he caught that train he would not have known that there was such a horse as The Hawaiian until he saw the account of the horse's win in the results on the following morning, and then the thought that he had not played that extension to the Honolulu hunch would have gruelled him.

ATTELL WHIPS HERRERA.

Abe Attell, claimant of the light featherweight championship, the latest fistic title, easily outpointed Aurelio Herrera in the windup at the American A. C's show at Chicago, March 28. Abe had the better of him to the ropes repeatedly and had much the better of the several rallies that cropped up.

Attell showed wonderful cleverness in ducking, slipping, sidestepping and weaving inside of Herrera's leads. He peppered the Mexican with straight lefts, and had him bleeding from the nose and mouth early in the first round and more than beid him even in the exchanges which Aurelio forced him into during the last half of the battle.

Attell's method of fighting did not meet with the approval of a majority of the spectators. They wanted him to stand toe to toe with his heavier and hard-hitting opponent, but Abe could not see it that way and devoted most of his time in dancing out of reach of the Mexican's wallops, He won the decision in six rounds by a city block.

BIG FORTUNES STAKED

IN THE SOUTH LONG YEARS AGO

ON POKER HANDS

How Two Young and Impetuous Southern Bloods Played Without a Limit Before the War.

ONE HAND CALLED FOR THIRTY THOUSAND DOLLARS

A Sensational Game Which Dissipated a Fortune and Which Was Followed by a Tragedy Enacted by the Loser.

The old Southerner was telling stories, and he finally |

"In 1861, just before the breaking out of the war, there was a dozen of us young blades living in and around Huntsville, Ala., who were ready for any form of excitement, from a cock fight to a game of poker, and who had means enough to keep us going at almost anything we took a notion to.

"Poker was the thing that was most likely to carry us too far, and I'm not sure but that, in spite of our recklessness, that very fact kept us from playing it too often. Not one of us would have admitted it, but I think we all felt it was a dangerous game as we played it, and we were ashamed to play the limit game.

"I heard an old gambler say once that faro was the true gentleman's game, because he could sit still and bet as much or as little as he liked without compulsion, whereas in poker he had to bet as much as the other man liked. And it seems to me there's some truth in

"We played it sometimes, though, for the very danger tempted us, and one night the game grew heavier than usual. It was seldom that single bets went higher than $100, and $500 was remarkable, but this night there had been several raises of a thousand each. Two of them had been called and one was met by a counter raise of two thousand, which took the pot, so you see the game was a big one.

"At last there came a deal in which Harry Cousins, having the age, made it a hundred more to play after four of us had come in. George Botetourt sat next and he made it a hundred more

"I dropped, and Will Moore dropped, but Clement Stillwell stayed for the two hundred. Then Cousins raised it five hundred and Botetourt made it a thousand more, and Stillwell dropped. "Cousins looked at his cards and said, 'I ought to raise you again, but I'll just see how many you'll take. So he made good and drew one card, and Botetourt stood pat. Of course, it was Botetourt's first bet and he threw in a dollar.

"Cousins raised him a thousand and Botetourt came back with five thousand.

" 'Ten more,' said Cousins

" 'And twenty,' said Botetourt. "Of course, they were using paper. Nobody, even in those days, carried any such money as that in his ciothes, but, as I said, any man in our set was good for anything he would give his word for. Debts of honor were always paid.

"Cousins hesitated just a moment and then said, Fifty more than you.

"Botetourt hesitated, and did considerable studying. Then he reached over and counted up the pot, evidently for the purpose of seeing what he owed already, and he got out a pencil and did a little figuring. Finally he said, very slowly:

" 'I can't call you for fifty thousand. As near as I can reckon, thirty thousand more than I have in will be all I have, and it will take a little time to sell out and pay that if I lose, but with that understanding. I call you for thirty thousand.'

"It was the first time I ever saw a man stake his whole fortune on a hand, and we were all justly excited, excepting Cousins, who seemed confident and who was a much richer man than the other. But when the show-down came Cousins had four sevens and Botetourt had four jacks.

"The second time I saw such a call it did not turn out so well. The party was not quite the same, for Will Moore was away and so was Stillwell. A man from Tennessee, who was a cousin of Congressman Jere Clemens sat in with us, and George Matthews had the fifth place

"The game started big this time. We used ten-dollar gold pieces for chips, and there must have been three or four hundred of them on the table, but the real betting was done with paper money, and we were all well supplied with that. Then, of course, as I explained, an I. O. U. was the same as money if a man chose to give one.

"There had been a sort of hostility between Cousins and Botetourt ever since the other game. The loss had not crippled Cousins in the least, but the sense of defeat had rankled, and Botetourt, though he had won, seemed to resent having been forced to expose his comparative poverty. They remained ostensibly on friendly terms, though, and had never chanced to run against each other very hard in poker during the year or so that elapsed.

"Clemens, the stranger, was a plunger, and he set the pace, which we were quick enough to follow, so in a few minutes we were betting hundreds on almost any hand, and thousands on good ones. The luck ran against Botetourt from the start, and he was thirty or forty thousand in a hole inside of half an hour. "Then there came a deal in which Clemens had the age, and Cousins sat next. He came in for two chips, the ante being one, and Botetourt, sitting next, came in also.

"I was next to say and finding two pairs I made it five chips to play. Matthews dropped and Clemens raised $50. Again Cousins stayed and I thought I saw him look at Botetourt as if anxious to see him raise. Whether or not I was right, Botetourt did raise, making it a hundred more, and I dropped.

"Well, Clemens made it another hundred and Cousins raised it a thousand, looking anxiously at Botetourt again. When Botetourt went back at him with another thousand I saw a gleam in Cousin's eyes that made me confident that he was going to get back some of the old loss, at least.

"Then Clemens dropped out. The others raised back and forth till they had some twenty thousand apiece in the pot and then called for the draw. It appeared, however, that both were standing pat, so Mathews laid the deck down again, and Cousins bet a hundred thousand dollars.

"It sounds fabulous, doesn't it? Certainly it was the largest single bet I ever saw made; but you must remember this was shortly before the Civil war, when we Southerners knew almost nothing of the value of money, and then there was a big score between the two

"I fancy, too, that Cousins was reckoning on Botetourt thinking it a bluff, and being encouraged to call. He knew of course that Cousins was sore, and he would think that Cousins was depending on the money to win for him.

"Anyhow, he was in the same predicament that he had been the previous year, with a difference that presently appeared. He counted up the pot again and did some more figuring, and finally said: " 'I call you for seventy thousand. It sall I have."

"Then Consins threw down an invincible hand, for we didn't play straights in those days, and of course there was no straight flush. He had four kings and an ace. What made it seem more wonderful was that Botetourt had the other three aces and a pair of treys, so that he seemed justified in calling.

"It was an awful blow that Cousins had given of course, taking Botetourt's entire fortune, but I don't think I would have held him to blame for doing it, since we were playing a perfectly straight game, if he had not said sneeringly:

" 'I took a lesson from you that time, Botetourt, You remember you stood put on four of a kind once before.

"Botetourt didn't say a word, but he turned very white and left the room. I think we all felt bad excepting Cousins, and we didn't play much longer that

"And even Cousins said he regretted the game when we learned next day that Botetourt had shot himself. It broke up the game for some time, and it was nearly a year after that before I sat in again.

'That was the time I got my lesson, for we were playing the same sort of a game again, and this time it was my turn to get caught in a place where I had to put up with a heavy loss as a certainty, or else do as the gambler said and bet as much as the other man wanted to. It was in the spring of '61, when we knew that war was inevitable.

"All the men I knew had joined the Montgomery Riffes, a crack corps as we thought it then, that was preparing to go into camp and I joined with the rest. That was how it happened that I sold out my business, for I had inherited a large establishment and was in sole charge of it; but realizing that I could not attend to business affairs and serve in the army at the same time, I accepted a good offer that came opportunely, and so found myself the possessor of $75,000 in cash be sides some personal belongings and a house worth

"It happened that the same party was playing again except that Botetourt's place was taken by Lieut. Hayden of the Rifles, who was probably the richest man in the party and a daredevil if ever there was one. Poor fellow. He was killed in the first engagement

"The game was as big as before. Somehow money eemed to have less value than ever.

"It was sometime after that before we learned what poverty was. Just then we were excited about everything, and we couldn't make the game exciting enough to satisfy us. I know for myself that I never played so recklessly before, or since; but for a time I was rather lucky.

"I won and lost in turn, but the winnings counted up faster than the losses and in an hour's time I must have been twenty thousand ahead. It was partly luck, and partly, I think, because the others were accustomed to see me play more cautiously and did not realize when I was bluffing.

"At length, however, the tide turned. I tried the bluff took one. That gave me confidence again, for I reasoned that they were both playing on two pairs, in which case my hand was likely to win, provided neither of them had bettered.

"Hayden bet a hundred without looking at his draw, and Cousins stayed. I had still enough fool confidence in my hand and enough of the bluffing fever left to induce me to raise, and I made it a thousand

"Then Hayden looked at his card and I knew by his face that he hadn't bettered. He studied a moment, though, and then raised me five thousand.

"At that Cousins laid down, and I would certainly have done the same if I had not been certain in my mind that Hayden was bluffing, but I was positive, and I went back at him with ten thousand more. Again I could see by his face that he felt that he was beaten, but he said, as coolly as he could:

" 'Ten more!'

" 'And twenty,' said I, and he almost shouted: " 'Fifty more!'

"Then I stopped to think. A call meant the risk of practically all I had in the world, but to lay down meant the loss of nearly fifty thousand. I thought of Botetourt, and though I knew I would not do what he did, yet I shuddered at the prospect of such ruin as had driven him to it. Then I thought of my previous convictions about Hayden's hand, and I stiffened up. Finally I said:

" 'I can't raise you, for I haven't the money. I call.' "And we showed down our hands. He had kings and tens and a seven next, precisely the same hand that I had, so of course we divided the pot.

"I reckon Hayden was well satisfied to have it turn out so, and I know I was. It seemed a huge joke at the time, but when I realized next day what I had done, I got frightened at the fascination that would lead one into such stupendous foliy, and I swore never to play cards again and I never have."

Declares That He is Not a "Dead One," and Will Prove it if His Old-time Rivals will Agree to Meet Him.

WHICH CLASS IS JIMMY BRITT CHAMPION OF?

John L. Sullivan's Shadow Grows Less---Queer Decisions in 'Frisco---Arthur Cripps Makes a Good Impression---Small Talk in Pugilism.

Not satisfied with having beaten Jim Corbett once, Bob Fitzsimmons wants to try it again, and is bending all his energies in the direction of getting on another match just to prove that he is not a "dead one," as they say he is in San Francisco. The spotted son of the Antipodes isn't at all pleased at the things the Western critics have been saying about him and takes advantage of every opportunity to get back at them in characteristic fashion.

"They call me an old man, but before I am through with the ring I'll make some of the young ones look sick. I challenge any fighter in the world in the light heavyweight, middleweight or heavyweight classes, barring none. I have fought 354 battles and been defeated but twice, both times being by Jeffries.

"The only reason I ever lost the championship was because of my hands failing to serve me. I have given them special care of late, and I am now in shape to do more effective punishment than ever before. With this assurance, I want to say that I stand ready to make a match with any reputable fighter in the world—barring no one.

—barring no one. "I will fight Corbett at any time, at any place and for any amount that any substantial club may offer, in this or any other country."

Fitz intimated that at present his finances were rather low and that the winner's end of a match would come in handy. The Australian received a message from Saudy Ferguson, his old sparring partner, in which the latter asked for a match with the old man. Ferguson said a Philadelphia club offered $5,000 for a match between he and Fitz, but the ex-champion would give Ferguson no definite answer.

It is barely possible, too, that before another mon... has elapsed Kid McCoy and Fitz probably will meet in the ring. Fitz heard that George Considine had posted a forfeit of $1,000 to bind a match with McCoy at 158 pounds. He said it looked as though the Hoosier meant business. He added that he was willing to meet McCoy providing that McCoy would give him three weeks in which to train.

Although Young Corbett and Jimmy Britt didn't fight for any recognized title, Britt says he will certainly arrogate to himself all the rights and privileges of a world's champion, and will be prepared to box men of the same size and poundage that Corbett was in the habit of matching with in his journeys through the land.

"I can make 128 pounds and fight at it if required. It isn't necessary to do so, however, to class with McGovern and Corbett, through whom the championship has descended to me. They seem to make 130 pounds their low limit in all the ring contracts they arrange nowadays, and if Corbett could keep defending his featherweight title at 130 pounds, no one will say that I should be denied the right to do so, I suppose."

Meanwhile arguments as to which particular class Britt is premier in are plentiful. Those who hold that no championship was involved in the recent contest make the point that 130 pounds is midway between featherweight and lightweight and is consequently neither fish nor flesh, so far as classification is concerned. The same claim was made when Young Corbett defeated McGovern.

If the discussions now going on give promise of becoming perennial Britt can take refuge behind the claim that he is the fellow who licked Young Corbett.

One thing is certain with every small and medium weight fighter of note claiming pre-eminence at a notch that does not allow of leeway for challengers, the classes have become fused and confused and about the only real distinction to be gained is honor of licking somebody who licked somebody else.

Many of John L. Sullivan's admirers, who in days gone by have cheerily wished that his "shadow might never grow less," ought to see him nowadays convalescing from an illness and eye trouble which for a time threatened him with total blindness. He has dropped fifty pounds of avoirdupols and is simply lost in the folds of the big dressing gown he used to wear before he was stricken ill. A huge pair of green goggles shade his weak eyes and he uses a stick to aid him in supporting his huge body. He is cheerful though through all his afflictions.

"At present I take but little interest in the old fighting game." he said, "for I know only too well that the puglists fighting nowadays are only bluffers. They do not dare to go the old pace that Paddy Ryan, Joe Goss, Peter Jackson, Jake Kilrain, George Dixon and John Flood, who died the other day, and myself, went a decade or two ago. Then quitting wasn't countenanced, the game was square and fake promoters were unknown. These scientific fakirs of to-day are willing to chop up in a fight, I mean give and take in the ring game, so long as a big purse is in sight and they are assured a good piece of money.

"Next fall I star with another company in New York if I live so long. I have not tasted liquor for over three months, and until this present disorder never felt better in my life,"

Give a helping hand to the old fellow if you can! He Analyzing the views of all the recognized puglistic critics throughout the country the consensus of opinion is that the worst Young Corbett should have had at the hands of Referee Graney was a draw. This belief prevails among persons who made a close perusal of the fighting as sent out by rounds by the various press associations. Judging from the accounts of the fight by rounds, the champion should at least have had a draw. Printed accounts can not always correctly portray a boxing bout, however.

In prizefighting there is an unwritten rule, as old as the game itself, which makes an allowance for champions. There have been but few referees in important contests, either in this country or in England, who have stripped a champion of his title unless he has been so decisively whipped as to eliminate all doubt of injustice. There have been but few instances, in fact, where a champion has been deprived of his title unless he has been sent to the land of dreams for the prescribed ten seconds.

It has been the practice of the best referees in the country to give the holder of the championship a slight advantage, and this is as it should be. There are many close students of the manly art who believe that no champion should lose his title as long as he is able to go the full limit of rounds and be strong at the ending. Young Corbett did this and more. All of the accounts of the fight are to the effect that he had the best of a big majority of the rounds, and, although the last three rounds were against him, he was strong at the final ring of the gong.

The Denver lad, who decisively wrested his title from Terrible Terry McGovern and who afterward successfully defended it against all comers till the Britt affair, is one of the most popular little men who ever crawled into a roped arena. They still have faith in his prowess and if he meets the Californian again he will probably carry the bulk of the local money. That Britt and Corbett will meet again before the passing of a great length of time seems a certainty.

Here is a businesslike communication

Here is a businesslike communication which merits much consideration, especially as it accompanied a check for $1,000 posted as a forfeit.

"Having assumed the management of Arthur Cripps, the bona fide and undisputed champion of Australia, I am anxious to match him against any middleweight in this country, Tommy Ryan in particular, as the latter claims the American title. Cripps has traveled 16,000 miles in order to compete for the world's championship. En route to this country from the Antipodes he stopped over in England and posted a forfeit to meet Jack Palmer, the British champion middleweight, but after waiting a month without receiving a reply from Palmer, drew down his forfeit and sailed for the United States. In support of the above challenge I have posted a forfeit with Sam C. Austin, sporting editor of the POLICE GAZETTE, of $1,000 to bind a match. In view of the fact that he is the recognized Australian champion, Cripps is entitled to consideration. Nobody barred. First come, first served.

Everybody who has seen Cripps with the "mufflers" raves over his ability as a boxer. The first opportunity to see him in action occurred the other day when he boxed with Herr Placke, the big Hollander, while the latter was training to meet Kid McCoy. During the four-round engagement Cripps got to his opponent without much trouble and made an impression that is sure to be lasting if he can sustain it in any of his mills

Cripps is a clever fellow, quick and agile, and seems to possess the knowledge of the fine points of the boxing game which distinguished Bob Fitzsimmons, Dan Creedon, Young Griffo, Tommy Tracey and other Australian fighters who have visited us. He has plenty of confidence in his ability and believes there is nobody here his weight whom he cannot defeat. Intellectually he is far above the average fighter. He converses fluently and his manner is pleasant and agreeable. He has made a very good impression upon everybody he has met and bids fair to become extremely popular.

Fitzsimmons says the reason he must fight again is because he lost $70,000 bucking a copper trade in Wall street!

Seventy thousand, eh! Wonder what brand he smokes?

Watch for the great double supplement of Jeffries and Munroe. Out on May 12.

The question of who is the bantamweight champion will be definitely settled when Frankie Neil and Hughey McGovern meet in the near future. Sam Harris has worked the wires for a week past in an endeavor to bring Neil to terms and has at last succeeded. Neil wanted 116 pounds at 3 o'clock, but finally agreed to 118, weighing to be done at the same hour. In all probability the lads will receive an offer from one of the San Francisco clubs.

Jim Neil, father of Frankie, says that when the proper time comes Hughey's friends will be accommodated with all the betting they want. He says further that he would just as lief have had his son sign with Terry McGovern at 124, ringside.

Reports from Albuquerque, N. M., say that New Mexico s anti-prize fight law is to be tested for the first time, although it has been on the statute books of the territory since Fitzsimmons won his battle in the bed of the Rio Grande at Juarez, Mexico, after having been turned out of New Mexico by the authorities.

Not long ago Otis Bolt, a Colorado puglilst, and Kid Bean, of Kansas City, fought a fourteen-round battle before a local athletic club. Bean was knocked out in the fourteenth round.

United States Attorney Childers sought to have the Grand Jury return indictments against Bolt and Bean. The Grand Jury, while still considering the matter, is said to have refused to return the desired bills. In caustic instructions, Judge Baker told the United States attorney his duty in the matter, and warrants have been issued.

Two of the leading experts of the grappling game are at loggerheads. One is Antoine Fournier, the noted French wrestier, who came to this country for the purpose of securing a match with any grappler in the business. He is disappointed because of his inability to secure engagements here. Fournier posted $50 to bind a bout with John Piening at Græco-Roman style, best two in three falls, for as much on the side as the latter cares to wage. Fournier does not think that Piening will respond, and has made preparations to sail for England, where he has received an offer to wrestle Tom Jenkins.

"This fellow Piening does not mean business," said the Frenchman while in the Police Gazette office the other day. "He claims the Græco-Roman championship. He has no more right to this title than I have. George Hackenschmidt is the real thing in this line and he knows it. Yet I am willing to meet Piening on any terms. He says that a match in public will not attract any attention. Well, I will meet him in private if he cares to, as I would like to convince the American public that I am no coward."

Young Corbett has joined the contingent of Eastern pugilists and managers who have lost their admiration for the Golden West and the native sons who control its boxing affairs. In Corbett's opinion he was "handed a hot one," and sincerely believes Referee Graney gave him the worst of it.

"There have been some pretty flerce games pulled off in the prize ring, but what I got was the flercest I ever saw or ever heard of," he said. "Why, a draw would have given me the worst of it."

Next to his bitterness against Graney the fighter was particularly worked up over a report sen. o't from San Francisco that he had but $500 left out of the 9,000 he received as his end of the purse after he had paid his debts.

"Oh, I'm broke, am I?" said Corbett. "Well, some of those native sons that are sending out that sort of stories would like to have what I've got left out of that fight and out of some other things. Just on the side, I cleaned up $30,000 at the track in 'Frisco while I was there."

JACK MUNROE AS A FIGHTER

How He Broke Into the Fistic Game and Made Good.

In view of the fact that he is soon to contest with James J. Jeffries for the title of heavyweight champion puglist of the world much interest is felt in how Jack Munroe, the Butte miner, first broke into the boxing game. He was born in Chester, Pa., in 1877, not far from where he fought his first important battle. His mother was more than six feet tall.

When Jack was twelve years old two brothers and he went to Nevada. From Nevada one brother and Jack went to Butte. There he went to school. When Munroe completed his high school term he went back to mining. Later he played on the football eleven. That was in 1895 and 1896.

After the close of the season Munroe went back to mining and was made mine boss of four levels. There was a big fellow named Fred Russell working for him. He wanted to be a fighter, so Munroe took him to 'Frisco.

At that time Munroe did not care much for boxing. He played football with the big Olympic A. C. team and incidentally went out and boxed with the big fighters that came to San Francisco to train. About a month after his second football season with the Olympic Club he entered a boxing tournament.

He engaged Al Nell to teach him. He was in good condition on the night of the tournament and won the amateur heavyweight championship by knocking out Milward in three rounds, and Gallagher in two rounds. Inspired by his two easy victories, Munroe turned professional and met Hank Griffin, who received the decision over him after twenty rounds of fierce fighting. After this fight Munroe went to Idaho to work on his four copper claims. While there he accidentally chopped his right foot nearly off with an axe. For two months he was laid up before he could make any use of his leg. When it was entirely well Munroe returned to Butte to earn some money to put into his claims.

to Butte to earn some money to put into his claims. Chance brought the Jeffries-Fitzzimmons outfit to Butte. The former had just administered his second defeat to the Australian, and for money-making purposes they had established a partnership for the purpose of giving exhibitions, and incidentally meeting all comers who had the temerity to face them. Munroe was pretty well thought of in the big mining city, and when Jeffries came along he was prevailed upon to meet him in a handicap match for a decision, Jeffries agreeing to knock him out in four rounds. This he failed to do and Munroe was awarded the decision, which, under the terms of their agreement was a perfectly just and equitable proceeding.

Since then Munroe has been before the public as an aspirant for championship honors.

EGAN HANDBALL CHAMPION.

Michael Egan won the world's championship at handball by defeating James Fitzgerald at San Francisco the best eight out of fifteen games on April 3. The previous time they played Egan won six out of seven games, therefore leaving only two games needed to win the match. Fitzgerald won the first game by a score of 21 to 19. The second game went to Egan with 21 to 13. The third game was simply a walkover, the champion running the score out while Fitzgerald scored only 4.

Magnificent double-page supplement of Jeffries and Munroe as they will appear in the ring when they meet, free with Police Gazette No. 1396. Out May 12.

YOUNG CORBETT BEATS MOWATT.

A large crowd turned out to see Young Corbett make his debut in Chicago, before the Waverly A. C., in a sixround bout with Tommy Mowatt on April 2. The fight was a furious one, full of action from the first bell to the final second, and Corbett earned the winner's share of the purse through his fast, aggressive and clever work.

In but one of the six rounds-the third-did Mowatt have anything on the Denver boy. In that session he outboxed Corbett, but the latter was under a pull, resting up, and Mowatt did little damage. In the other rounds Corbett fought like a demon, trying to score a knockout with every punch. That he did not put the Chicago boxer to sleep was a surprise. He landed some terrific blows to the head and body, and only the fact that the battle was a short one and that Mowatt was in excellent condition kept Tommy from taking a trip to Several times it looked as though Mowatt had reached the end of his tether, but he always came back and fought on. The Chicago boy showed remarkable grit, carrying the fight to Corbett when most boxers would have been tin-canning.

At the end of the fifth round Mowatt was staggering, and at one time in the final session he was a bit uncertain on his pins. But he had sense enough to fight back when Young Corbett rushed him, and kept the latter too busy to land the punch soporific with the proper effect.

The Broadway A. C., Philadelphia, was packed to the doors on March 31 when Sammy Smith and Billy Willis, both claimants for the featherweight championship of the city, faced each other. Smith had decidedly the best of the bout, and deserved the decision had one been rendered.

CURE SYPHILIS

> I have found the marvelous secret of Nature in restoring perfect health to men and women suffer-ing from virulent or contagious blood poison

'No Man is Lost-There is a Quick, Sure and Lasting Cure for Syphilis."-Dr. Ferris.

With this marvelous mysterious compound which I have discovered only after a lifetime devoted to search through all the realms of science and the archives of the ancients, it is possible to heal at once the awful sores, clear the complexion of the copper spots, dry up the mucous patches, heal the ulcers and leave the body clean and healthy and wholesome. With the aid of this mysterious Vital Life Fluid no man or woman will ever again be troubled with blood poison or any of its evil effects.

again be troubled with blood poison or any of its evil effects.

Remember it matters not to me or my remedy what stage your case may be in, and it matters not how long you have had it, how you got it or when you got it. To me it matters not what doctors or scoffers say. This is no ordinary drug or medicinal method of treatment, but I call it the Vital Life Fluid itself, and where many remedies and doctors have failed I have repeatedly and quickly cured the worst old cases, healed the sores and caused the mucous patches, copper colored spots, and other evidences of this terrible poison to disappear like magic. My secret Vital Life Fluid never falls, and its cures are lasting. My private address is Dr. C. S. Ferris, 8014 Strawn Building, Cleveland, Ohio, and I urge every person suffering from blood poison to send to me and I will forward by first mail, prepaid, enough of my marvelous discovery to convince you.
